England.-The position taken by the English government in any European complications differs in this respect from that of any other power in this important point, that it depends upon the feeling of the people and therefore is fluctuating and uncertain just in proportion as the other view seems likely to obtain predominance. So in regard to the Eastern question, a reaction against the traditional policy of maintaining the "integrity of the Ottoman empire" as an obstacle to Russian aggression was agitated throughout the kingdom during last summer with great energy. Mr. Gladstone being the chief engineer of the movement-public meetings were held in every part of the country in which the atrocities of the Bashi Bazouks or Turkish irregulars were the main topic of the orators who waved the bloody shirt in a style which might have done honor to our own Mortons and Blaines; sets of resolutions were passed, monster petitions concocted and all the apparatus of popular excitement put in active operation-apparently kindred States had done; and morewith little or no effect; for the resoover Bohemia and Moravia clamlutions of Mr. Gladstone embodying his anti-Turkish views, which were presented last Monday in the English House of Commons were not taken up either by the ministerial party or the opposition and their support was expected to be confined to about a hundred of the personal supporters of Mr. Gladstone." It is a signal illustration of the almost irresistible force of routine that this should be so. Froude Gladstone and Carlyle-what greater names can be produced among the political thinkers of England? And these three one after another have, by cogent reason and earnest expostulation, argued the futility of trying to hold together a decrepid, corrupt and dying dynasty like that of the Turks in Europe—they have argued that it forces the English people into an alliance with bigotry and fanatical persecution, that it compels them to become the apologists of lust and murder, and to constitute themselves the confidential advisers of a nation which refuses to be advised by them and hates them worse than berment of Turkey and the conseit hates the dreaded Russia; it im- quent enveloping her Southern and poses on them the task of forever | Eastern frontier by Russian States, botching and tinkering at the great | but she dreads the disintegrating cracks and breaches which are con- effects of war, the separation of stantly threatening the existence of her German and Hungarian conthe Ottoman power, which in spite of stituents, which could only issue their efforts persists in a course in the haughty house of Hapswhich can have no end but that of burg sinking again from the impespeedy disolution, and still a few rial rank into mere Grand dukes of sounding phrases such as the "interests of the British empire" and the "balance of European power" reconcile them again to take up the | izing the war and keeping | it as far weary task of weaving Penelope's from her own frontiers as possible. web, which they know will be unravelled again as soon as their work table and inexorable, has temporais done. This latter I have come to know as an indisputable fact in our present affairs, and the outlook is surely a grave one. As to British interests, there is none visible or conceivable to me, except taking strict charge of our route to India by Suez and Egypt, and for the rest, resolutely steering altogether clear of any coparinery with the Turks in regard to this or any other British interest whatever. It should be felt by England as a real ignominy to be conped from it, in an instant and main. Now Austria dreads, in a T. CABLLYE, 5 Chevne Row." "Chelsea, May 1.
